The Dark Forest: Remembrance Earth’s Past is a science fiction novel written by the Chinese author Cixin Liu. It is the third book in the Dark Forest series, continuing the story that began in The Three-Body Problem. The novel explores themes of human nature and the search for extraterrestrial life, as well as the potential consequences of discovering advanced technology.

The story opens with a group of Chinese scientists who have discovered a new alien civilization. They communicate with the aliens, who reveal that they have been studying Earth for centuries and are aware of the Earth's imminent destruction. The aliens offer to help the Earth avoid this fate, but only if the humans can provide them with a significant amount of their human consciousness.

The humans are faced with a difficult decision: Should they accept the aliens' offer and risk giving away their most precious resource? Or should they continue to develop their own technology and try to find a solution on their own? The novel explores these themes through a series of thought-provoking scenarios and debates, ultimately leaving the reader to decide for themselves what course of action to take.
